

Oracles

Kath All through life one is faced with difficult decisions, how we arrive at those decisions is as personal an individual as we are, some people pray, others consult friends and family and some practice the ancient art of asking the Oracles. Ann what are the Oracles?

Ann Oracles need to be of one's own choosing, mine actually are taken from a set of booklets and cover a wide spectrum of sayings by poets, writers, philosophers, religious leaders of all denominations. They should at all times be treated seriously as they do offer untold help to whatever is on one's mind when seeking their spiritual guidance. The Oracles advice is very often not what one would expect and can be really full of surprises. Their instruction is all encompassing, it is entirely unbiased and teaches one to think more clearly what is actually at stake and to consider everything in as broad a form as possible. One is tapping into a higher intelligence than can see the dark side of things as well as the bright. Just occasionally the Oracles will refuse to answer, either because it considers the question too flippant or there is something more important they wish to say which requires more careful consideration at that particular time.

Sometimes they show a sense of humour making me laugh out loud, where all this comes from is a complete mystery although I do have several theories. Either I, like so many others have someone who has passed on, or St Bridget, that is to say the real Druid Celtic St Bridget, not the latter day Swedish replacement by the Roman Catholics and who many believe can give support to those who seek her help. I have found that the Oracles have never ever let me down, somewhere in this vast unknown arena lies the key as to why we are here and more importantly certain knowledge that the body and the soul are inexorably linked and are one, whilst we are here on earth.

Kath So when you ask a question Ann you randomly pick one of the Oracles, you open it up, then you read what is on that page.

Ann Yes I go to them blindly.

Kath I asked you before we did this interview if the Oracles would mind you talking about them on the radio and you said you would consult them. What did they say?

Ann I went back home and thought about it, I thought, well, if they say that it is not to be, I won't go ahead with this recording, but fortunately I picked out one that they liked it because it was of help.

Kath So St Bridget likes Spotlight on Brittany?

Ann If it's St Bridget.
